TENOR BURGSTALLER SAILS ON SHIP WITH HIS FRIEND HEXAMER'S WIFE

Opera Star Who Created "Parasol" and Rich Hoboken Woman Leave Together.

HUSBAND NOT AMAZED.

He Sued for Divorce After Driver Upset Coach With Pair Riding in It.

Alois Burgstaller, the famous Wagnerian tenor, who created the role of "Parasol" in the opera "The Flying Dutchman," sailed for Europe this morning on the steamship Kronprinzessin Cecilie. So did Mrs. A. P. Hexamer, of Hoboken, out of whose cab Mr. Burgstaller fell one night last winter with a degree of publicity extremely unpleasant to both the Burgstaller and Hexamer families. With Mr. Burgstaller and Mrs. Hexamer today sailed her child and his child, and a governess and a maid.

Not since the abruptly brief visit of Enrico Caruso's affinity a few days ago have operatic circles been so stirred. When a reporter for The Evening World called at Herr Dippe's office in the Metropolitan Opera-House today to ask the particulars of the Burgstaller departure, Mr. Dippe's secretary said:

Glad He Didn't Miss It.

"It is that you asked us if he had missed the ship? No! That is good! It is very good. He bought four tickets—one for himself, and three others. Do not ask us who the others were, for we do not know. It is nobody's business. He did not miss the ship—that is enough. It is very good."

Mr. Hexamer, who has lived alone in Hoboken since the late cab incident, when asked regarding his wife's departure, said:

"I understood that Mrs. Hexamer was going abroad next Tuesday. If she has gone to-day, instead, what difference does it make?"

That cab affair happened Dec. 23, 1907. It was in Hudson avenue, at the corner of Sixth street, Hoboken. It was generally understood that the Hexamer coachman disliked Mr. Burgstaller, who seemed to infringe on the coachman's self-established prerogatives. At any rate, the coachman turned the cab neatly on its side after jumping for safety himself.

Judge Postponed Divorce.

The incident aroused Mr. Hexamer's emotions and a suit for a divorce resulted. The suit was sent to ex-Judge Roger A. Pryor as referee. Judge Pryor has certain old-fashioned ideas about the way in which divorce actions should be conducted and he said he would not tolerate "star chamber" proceedings. The case was indefinitely postponed.

Mrs. Hexamer was the daughter of Peter Fuchs, a wealthy New York man. He wanted his daughter to marry Mr. Hexamer, but she didn't feel like it at the time, and married Dr. Scherlach, of the New York Board of Health. Later she realized the wisdom of her father's advice and married the man of his choice.

Then the coachman, Gustav Grieger, needed $200, and because Mrs. Hexamer refused to give it to him tipped Mr. Burgstaller out of the cab one dark night when he was returning from Hoboken to New York.

At the time Mr. Hexamer merely said that Geiger was a loafer who had grossly insulted his talented friend Mr. Burgstaller.

"I, too, think he is a great loafer," said Burgstaller when interviewed on the subject.

Mrs. Hexamer has been living at the Hotel Irving, in Gramercy Park, since her separation from her husband. Inquiries there as to her sailing to-day, elicited nothing from the telephone exchange of the hotel but loud laughs.
